Roblin Government Returned

Winnipeg, July 11.—The Roblin government (Conservative) was returned today by about the same majority as before. It is possible that the opposition will have one or two more supporters than in the last house, but the majority will not be materially reduced. The vote as given at midnight was: Government 23; opposition 14; doubtful and incomplete 4.

Crops Poor in the States

Washington, July 9.—The crop growth of the United States on July 1 was lower than at any time during the past ten years, according to a crop report of the department of agriculture issued today. The report says:

"The general average condition of crop growth in the United States on July 1 was about 5.5 per cent lower than on July 1, 1909; 3.8 per cent lower than on July 1, 1908, and 3.4 per cent lower than the ten-year average condition on July 1, 1911."

Perhaps the worst feature of the situation is the drouth that prevails in the chief wheat growing states.

Feminine Smokers Increase

New York, July 12.—Among the million dollars' worth of presents to Miss Mildred Carter and Viscount Acheson, which are being placed in the London residence of the young couple at No. 15, Chesham street, are some which point to an undesirable condition among the women of rich and fashionable society. Among the gifts to Miss Carter, or Lady Acheson as she is now, were a number of smoking articles, cigarette holders, ash trays and receptacles for pipes and cigars. Indeed every young bride in fashionable society is now the recipient of every article used by the inveterate smoker. They are usually wrought of gold and jewelled, and some of them are quite ornamental.

But aside from the beauty of the articles there is a certain gruesomeness attached to such things when they are considered with a young bride. Fortunately in Miss Carter's case the cigarette holders and other things are not needed, for she is one of the very few young women in society who do not smoke. When she was 16 years old, her father, Ridgeway Carter, gave her $500 if she would not smoke until she attained the age of 18. Lady Acheson is now 23, and one of her proudest boasts is that she has not attained the cigarette habit. She may well be proud of this fact when we consider that she is living among girls who first smoked because it was considered fashionable and smart, but who found out later that they could not stop whether they desired or not.

Sir Willifrid Laurier is expected to arrive in Calgary on August 12, and will address the public in Shermans' hall on Saturday night, Aug. 13.

Farmer's Advocate Midsummer Number

The annual midsummer number of The Farmer's Advocate and Home Journal, Winnipeg, was published yesterday. It is a 68-page edition in colored cover, well illustrated, and replete with seasonable matter for the farm and home. Special articles dealing with the westward movement of grain, the horses of Orkney and Shetland Islands, the farmer's position in politics, poultry raising in British Columbia, as well as shorter articles on matters of interest to farmers and farmers' wives at this season, make this number of unusual value. It is printed on extra quality paper, the frontispiece shows a typical farm home and rural highway, the matter is of special interest, and a copy is well worth sending to friends in the South, in the East, or in the Old Country as a souvenir of the land we live in. Several thousand extra copies have been printed for readers who desire to procure more than their usual one copy of the paper. It is supplied at 25 cents the copy.

Storyettes

A LADY about to deliver a temperance lecture thought it well to get her information at first hand, so she interviewed a workman. "Is it true," she asked, "that you workingmen drink a great quantity of beer every day?" "I don't know, ma'am," he replied; "all depends. Some dyes I've seen drink a gallon or two a pint; while, on the other hand, some dyes I've seen me drink quite a lot."

DURING an equestrian performance a number of ladies in the front stood up, thus obstructing the view of those persons who were seated. It was reported that the ladies had come all in a happy thought to occur to one of the sufferers. He called out, in measured tones: "Will the pretty lady in front please sit down?" whereupon five women briskly seated themselves.

THE young woman had taken the decision to die when talking with a friend. "Are you fond of stings?" he asked. "As a general thing, yes," she answered, looking up into his eyes with an engaging frankness that threatened to burst him to his heart. "Come to think of it, I have a little pain in my heart," she added, hastily, as he started to say something pretty. "Not any tonight, I suppose?" "My heavens!" exclaimed the absent-minded beggar, "that reminds me of my errand. My wife is in a fit!"

THE village constable was in a hurry when somebody asked him where he was going — "in such a hurry," God almighty! "I'm going to Painesville," replied. "It's a good distance away. He's got a curiosity about the other night his old Jersey cow had when he went down to give her a dose of cow medicine. But if he didn't make a mistake and give her grain of paint. Now instead of going to the post office, my wife, who is a cow, goes 'Honk, honk!' like one of them that blamed automobiles."

TWO Irish miners in a city bank rudely warning their tails at the cashier's window. "This reminds me of Finnegan," remarked one. "What about Finnegan?" inquired the other. "It's a story," said the man. "The story is, when he died, and when he died, St. Peter he said, 'It's a fine job you've had here for a long time.' Well, Finnegan," said St. Peter, "here we are. A million years — a minute and a million dollars as a cent." "Ah!" said Finnegan, "I'm needing cash. Lend me a cent." "Sure, said St. Peter, "just wait a minute."

IT was the morning of the Yale-Harvard game at Cambridge, and two New Haven collegians were wandering through the Harvard yard, in the spirit of visitation. Down a walk toward them came a youth of serious aspect, but palpably an under-graduate. "I beg your pardon," said the Yale man, "but you are not the stranger, can you tell me where I can find the Harvard University?" "I'm very sorry," said the serious one, "but you are not the one who has asked me to speak. I'll take it up. You see, there are so many Yale men in town."

JUST CURED HIM THAT WAS ALL

WHAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DID FOR THOMAS MOON

Doctors Could Not Cure His Dropsy, but Dodd's Kidney Pills Cleared It Out Completely

Midstons, Sask., June 15, 1910. (Special) — "Cured me completely. That's what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for me," said Thomas Moon, a well-known resident of this place who for years suffered from dropsy and swellings brought on by diseased kidneys.

"I had pains in the small of my back," Mr. Moon continued, "and the lower limb. The swelling increased first in my legs and gradually got to my body. I tried various doctors but kept getting worse every day until I was swollen up to an awful size."

"One doctor sent me to the hospital, where I got a little benefit, but the disease still continued. The swelling increased in my legs and gradually got to my body."

"Then I used Dodd's Kidney Pills, and, as I said before, they cured me completely."

Dropsey Swellings are caused by diseased kidneys failing to take the surplus water out of the blood. Cure the kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills and the Dropsey naturally cures itself.

The Horseman

THE never was a time in the history of trotting sport when every prosperity, so far as pertained to competition, was more general than now. It is also worth remark that many of the more half-mile track associations which offered purses from $500 to $1,000 have received increases. It is quite evident that the natural law of development and progress will take care of the national sport in the great East.

The object of the horseman is to conserve and develop the sport in the East, in those great centres of population which were at one time its stronghold. These cities hold two grand circuit meetings each year, and Philadelphia holds a grand circuit meeting at Belmont and Point Breeze Parks, in addition to minor meetings in the spring and fall. The horseman is progressing, and the laws were passed the associations dropped the meetings. They had the double result that not only would the horses and drivers be better, but the public would also stay away. That deviation is now a thing of the past. There are now a large number of tracks, and the racing and legitimate love of the sport are waged by the gambler, tall, New York, Hartford, Boston, and in the West, and will hold meetings at which there will be no money changing hands. They can do so, surely. Philadelphia, with its large number of wealthy amateur horsemen, can follow suit. There is the way, provided in itself, to their shoulders to the wheel, formed an association and will hold a grand circuit meeting at the Empire City track. The track will be built under a cost of $10,000, and the chances are that with favorable weather, the meeting will clear itself. The managers of the racing association, and accompanying them, have altered the conditions of the present times. In the old days they relied upon the public to pay the entrance fees and the expenses of the meeting, instead of the horsemen instead of the public. The time has come when the clever horse will rely absolutely on the horsemen and the public.

STANLEY AND THE DOGS

F OR many years the common observation that there is a certain animal type a decided resemblance to familiar animals, a notable example was that of Louis Napoleon whose dog was a black pug. The dog was readily converted into a bird of prey sometimes the French eagle, but often more strikingly a vulture preying upon the dead.

The dignified and venerable Charles Darwin accepted an observation of this sort as applied to himself and made a curious reference of its coincidence with his favorite theories while the resemblance between the countenance of Paul Kruger and that of an exceedingly sagacious gorilla was more than remarked.

An amusing discovery of unhuman kindness was related by a friend of the late Sir James M. Flinders. When Flinders visited the Karagoo, an African tribe rather above the average in intelligence, he had with him a fine bulldog which he had named Stanley. Stanley had all the ugly characteristics of the breed.

Now it appears that the Karagoo much esteemed this beast, and their chief, before parting with the white men, ingeniously pointed out an old fact that had been observed. The Karagoo had detected that the thin-skinned and thick-lipped looked, he thought, much like the English dog; while the half-wild Karagoo dogs, clean-cut, keen-sighted, and alert, bore a marked resemblance to their masters did, like the English.

Whether Stanley, who had every right to think well of his own personal appearance, relished this comparison or not, he could not do otherwise than take it in good part, and he had the sense of humor enough to pass it on for the amusement of others after he got home.

Doomed to Suffering RESCUED BY FRUIT-A-TIVES

CHARLES BARRETT, Esq. Harbor au Bousc, March 24, 1909. "I suffered terribly from Dysentery last summer. I was treated by physicians and took many remedies but got no relief. Then I took Fruit-a-tives and this medicine completely cured me. My everything else failed. To all sufferers from Indigestion, Bilelessness and Constipation, I strongly advise them to take this fruit-a-tive." — Charles Barrett, Esq. Box 6 for $2.50—trial box, 25¢. associations, and as soon as Philadelphians and a few other points take courage and get into line, the Eastern campaign will be just as prosperous as the great West.

JACK BARRYMORE dropped into a Broadway restaurant the other day and fate assigned to him a waiter who, it seemed, was a queer actor, was not, however, from the chin up. Failing to get anything he ordered, he sat at last lost patience. "Waiter," he said, "you are the silliest things in pants." "I am not an extra," replied the waiter. "I am a professional. What do you check this job and try pie-clothes playing at the opera?" "I can play a pie-clothes," said the waiter. "I've all rights," retorted Barrymore. "Why waste all your income in one place?"

A Shapely Cigar Means Comfort in Smoking

Did you ever smoke a cigar that felt as though you had the handle of a hay-fork in mouth? — have stretched your jaws till the muscles were sore out of shape?

If you have, you will know what I mean when I refer to the shape of a cigar as being one of the points which determine the difference between a good and a bad cigar.

Of course, a cigar, like a man, cannot travel on its shape alone. It must have other qualities, — taste, — must be perfect, it must draw well and smoke evenly, and the flavor must be true throughout the whole cigar.

But lots of cigars have these qualities which are yet an unsatisfactory smoke.

The smoker perhaps doesn't realize just what it is he doesn't like. But all the while he is unconsciously laboring to keep a grip on the end of it, which slides and wriggles until the wrapper hangs in shreds from the butt.

His cigar lacks shape.

If you want to realize how important is the shape of a cigar in deciding on the choice of a烟斗。

There are other cigars, perhaps, equal in aroma, equal in tobacco, equal perhaps in all the little points which go to make a satisfying smoke.

But the BUCK-EYE is nothing if it is not perfect, and perfection in a cigar cannot be achieved.

Just as much care and expense has been incurred in arriving at the ideal shape of cigar is in the BUCK-EYE as in any other point of excellence.

P.S.—THE BUCK-EYE does not travel on its shape—but its shape helps to make it the best Ten Cent Cigar sold to-day.

DAME FASHION'S DECREES

WHILE it may not be necessary to bestow quite as much time and thought upon selecting this year's gown for the season's wardrobe, none the less is the gown an important one. To begin with, evening dress is far more universally popular than it was some twenty years ago, and the choice of gown is almost as great for the evening, for the evening, for theatre and at home, as well as for the more formal dinner; and while there are many different styles, some waists being cut much lower than others, they are all on the whole very becoming. The choice of gown intended for afternoon reception, card or garden party. When selecting the summer evening gowns there should be taken into consideration where the season is to be spent, for, in spite of the extravagance of modern dress and the really absurdly elaborate clothes that are worn to small informal entertainments, the instinctively (or cultivatedly) conservative woman of taste in most cases will have her gown appropriate to the place. This may be just as easily — are often more so—but there is a most marked difference between her gorgeous ball gown and the gown intended for an informal dinner, in the height of sash and the width of a sheer of material. This is a most difficult proposition this summer to select gowns unlike those that have been popular all winter. Chiffon, voile de soie and silk muslin and the finest of ordinary fabrics make up into the daintiest and most becoming of evening gowns, while delicate and simple the heavier, more elaborate fashions of the last winter.

There is nothing so practical as the black evening gown; in truth, one of the greatest objections to it is that it is so, for every social position, that most women, if for a formal dinner is given the chances are greatly in favor of every woman being attired in black.

There are many new models this season that make up well, and some that combine well. Liberty satin, lace and voile de soie are charming together, while, as there is no rule that commands there shall only be all black, most attractive combinations can be introduced. The colored laces or in the tones of color should be at the waist or the trimming. This is to be a summer for black and white effects and the white lining showing through the transparent black voile de soie should be a feature. The fabric to pass over the lace. Bands of satin or velvet ribbon are most effectively, as are folds of the material, and in many of the smartest gowns no other trimming is required. Sometimes the under skirt is not entirely covered by the over-skirt, which is most becoming in white or overskirt. This is so decidedly a contrast that it is objected to on the ground that it cuts the generally becoming lines, but a sensible source of the voice of fashion prefers this, however, to the plain black; but again this is a question for the individual taste to decide, and consequently there are not often two gowns made alike, though the identical model may be chosen for several.

More length to the skirt, only one band, if any, and but one rosette or bow just at the back of the skirt to hold back and to gather the material into the accepted width is one way of solving the difficulty, for then the general effect is not so suddenly given as the full width with the trimming is hardest to keep, but a more elaborate finish in the form of fichu style works wonders. Just as it is for a young girl, the model in voile de soie or any transparent fabric is most charming and becoming, especially in the white. There is nothing more attractive than one of chiffon or voile de soie, made quite plain but with double skirt effect and a round fichu edged with narrow crystal fringe. This model is also very becoming, but it is a fact that white or white is chosen then a spray of artificial flowers or one large rose and a bow of ribbon is the only trimming needed on the waist.

In every wardrobe there is or should be a more elaborate evening gown, for there is always some occasion during the summer season when formal dress is required. Many women keep for this purpose the freshest of the last winter's fashions, and when the time comes to add to the cost the new gown is ordered. Satin, always a satisfactory material, is worn in summer, the softest, most graceful quality. The close-fitting princess style, with the tunic of net, lace and embroidery, is still popular, however, but it is generally becoming, and there are many new designs and patterns for the tunic, so that the fashion is still popular. Another of the winter fashions that are again popular is the silk of satin with the tunic of net, with wide chiffon, either over a contrasting color of lace and with sleeves of the same.

This is a smart model and very practical, made in black fiber and with the tunic of net, the right tucks at the side or back with full rosette, or with the double skirt effect, the upper skirt pointed in front and made high at the waist. lace, but in draped folds, not merely a high skirt effect. The waist is very becoming, and often the black voile de soie, plain or embroidered in jet, crystal rhinestones, gold or silver embroidery, is almost always becoming and effective, while a fine starting and compassing effect is obtained by a lace or cream white chiffon in soft folds is draped over the shoulders, having kimono-like sleeves. An expensive cream lace over pale pink is also fashionable, but while startlingly effective it does not meet with so enthusiastic and universal approval with the plain black and seems better suited to be figured broads in the light colorings.

Fascinating, dainty and most attractive are the chiffon, voile de soie and muslin gowns made of plain materials with fancy borders. The double skirt style can easily be carried out in these fashions, while the waist needs no other trimming than that given by the border. Again, there is a choice in the color of the lining, and here the choice is for a blue ground with a border of pink flowers. The lining of the gown, of pink, will show the faintest glint of pink through the blue and give that transparent, delicate appearance that is also, for an old white lining can be easily veiled by a thin inexpensive mouseline de soie over which is put the chiffon or voile of some other color, the mouseline de soie being the lining, which is added to the waist. It will be a new silk or satin lining, and in just these small details can the cost of a gown be kept within its possible limits.

An excellent invention is in the way of evening gown for the house, which is the plated off-white in color, white.

Only the body of the waist is lined, and with a chiffon or batiste lining, but the gown is worn over a princess slip of white. The bodice is lined, and the skirt is unlined.

It is offered, and one woman will do for the size.

The entire deau of lace is lighter and shows better the color of the lining than the bands of satin or velveteen which are on some of the gowns. The lace is a good choice, and the choice can be governed by personal taste. Belts and girdles are of much importance. For the newest evening gowns the soft folded silk or satin belt finished with flat double bow knot, is deau and new, and here the belt is given in broad.

One of the most glaringly obvious faults of a poor dressmaker is the skirt that is shorter in front than in the back, and it is a fault that grows worse all the time, so that when the woman wears it she has to turn her head to the right worse every time the gown is worn. To hang a skirt well is certainly a most difficult proposition, but nothing makes more difference in the appearance of the costume. Often, in fact, the skirt is too long, and the woman is compelled to bring it being wide enough or not cut and fitted across the front. Another reason is because the skirt is drawn back too tight in order to gain the narrow effect that the present fashion demands.

A skirt can be extremely narrow if properly cut and hung and if sufficient width around the hips is provided. In fact, the fault is that when it is drawn too much from the front and in consequence the back is pulled. The best tailors always speak of balancing the coat, meaning that from the shoulders the lines hang straight and correct, and the same also applies to the skirt. For home dressinggowns it is well to have a belt, good hanging muslin pattern and then work after that, for more than half the battle is won when this is secured.

BORN AND DIED'

NEW ZEALAND has about the lowest death-rate in the world.

Ireland's death-rate is slightly lower than that of England and Wales.

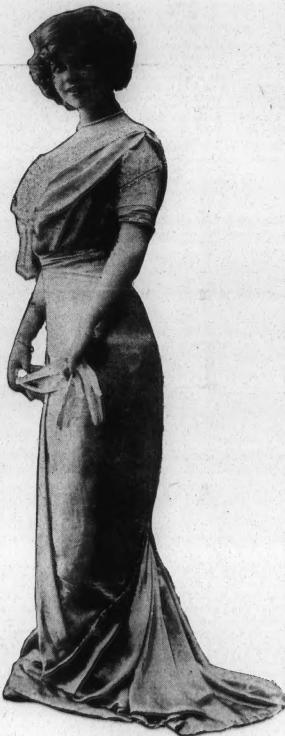

England maintained the highest point on record in 1876.

In 1902 there were two thousand and sixty-four deaths due to smallpox in England and Wales.

In six of the past nine years the deaths in France have exceeded the births.

No death from hydrophobia has been registered in England since 1902.

In England and Wales the birth-rate has been declining for many years.

Cerise Liberty Satin Gown

Of every one thousand marriageable persons that are in Great Britain, under fifty are married.

There are about two hundred births annually on ships trading to and from British ports.

No direct correspondence can be traced between the fluctuations of the marriage and birth rates respectively.

Ireland has the highest death-rate of any European country.

There were twelve deaths due to smallpox in England and Wales in 1902, and twenty-nine deaths due to the effects of variola.

Middlesexshire shows the highest and Northamptonshire the lowest number of births in proportion to married women, among English counties.

WHY GREAT DISCOVERIES IN SCIENCE ARE GROWING SCARCE

A DISCUSSION of the influence exerted by mathematics on scientific discovery, after proceeding for some time, has led to the somewhat unexpected conclusion that the result great discoveries, if any at all made, are at any rate certain to become scarce. The explanation is that the progress of discovery or of invention is dependent on the mathematical problem of investigation. The view has been expressed by Sir Oliver Lodge and by Professor Henri Béquerel that this is a natural result of the development of science, the result of a natural law.

Also a successful remedy in itself, and a direct consequence of the great scientific discovery and greater scientific activity of the past century. Science, then, is very slow.

The surface or the mind is rendered the mining operations of mathematics necessary for further development.

It is well known that the English

Engineering Supplement (London), how far it is a true statement of the case, are the results of the scientific discoveries of the past century.

Before any adequate answer to the problem can be given, our contemporary says, it must be remembered that the problem of invention—of discovery and invention—is of two kinds. There is discovery or invention (which adds to the stock of scientific knowledge). Then there is discovery or invention, which gives immediately the ability to add to the material resources of civilization—purely scientific discovery or invention.

"Despite the occasional overlapping of these two forms of invention, there is a real distinction between them, and the question is whether the one should suggest that the answer to the above question is negative in the one case and affirmative in the other. Surface mining operations of mathematics certainly do seem to be getting more scarce, but purely practical discoveries are to be found just as frequently now as in the past."

As a general rule, the applications of mathematics to the solution of scientific problems, and for the discovery of those new principles of mechanics of mathematical analysis are found to be increasingly necessary."

Western inventors know that their mechanisms one to another in almost any new invention will bring into play nearly every scientific law known to the educated mind. In the wide range of dimensions throughout which success is even possible is so small that the smaller the model, the greater error would be involved as a cause for maintaining the correct relationship of parts, so that the very existence of the invention is at least as much due to the inventiveness and mathematical abilities of each other. As regards these discoveries and inventions which are of practical use to society, the problem of invention is, therefore, that it is as necessary as ever it was for new discoveries to be made without the aid of either science or mathematics."

In the work of pure science, therefore, it must be considered that mathematics is growing in importance. It first became important in the field of gravitation, where its field was immensely widened by the immortal Newton, leading to its crowning success in the discovery of Neptune. Even in the next great success was in electricity, where Clerk Maxwell, by his brilliant mathematical instinct, was able to predict the existence of transverse waves in the ether which now form the basis of wireless telegraphy. Its latest achievement is the bringing up of the character of radio-activity into thousands of corpuscles, and the endowment of physicists with such infinitely delicate analytical apparatus that the smallest mass of times smaller than the smallest hitherto recognizable can now be measured and traced through the most complicated transformations. At the present time it offers, in conjunction with spectrum

Town in Ashes

Dalhousie, N. B., July 12.—Campbellton was practically put out of existence yesterday, only seven houses being left. The fire started up town about 3 o'clock, a terrific northwest wind was blowing, and in four hours the entire town was in ruins with a population of 5000 homeless, and many of them scarcely half clothed. The wind was so strong that when a pile of 10,000,000 shingles caught fire they were carried blazing through the streets like a match shaft. Five hundred mills have gone down with a million feet of lumber piled in the yards.

The town is ruined. The post office and customs, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of New Brunswick, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Roman Catholic church convent and hospital, the Baptist church, the English and Presbyterian churches, every store and every industry. In short, Campbellton is a town that has ceased to exist. The reports show that there was no loss of life.

THE BOTTLE CONJURER.

An Old Time Hoax That Caused a Riot in a London Theater.

In 1748 there appeared in the newspapers of London an advertisement stating that on a certain night a remarkable conjurer would perform in the Haymarket theater. He would, the advertisement ran, borrow a common walking cane from any member of the audience and "thereupon play the music of every instrument now in use." When the time came he said that he would take an ordinary wine bottle, place it on a table in the middle of the stage, get into it "in the sight of all the spectators" and sing while in it. In the same issue of the newspaper was another advertisement announcing the arrival of Signor Capotto Jumpedo, "a surprising dwarf no taller than a tobacco pipe" who engaged to perform with and outdo the "bottle conjurer." The dwarf, all manner of shapes and variety, opened his mouth wide and jumping down his own throat." This feat, not without reason, Signor Jumpedo described as the "most wonderful wonder of all wonders as ever the world wondered at."

The night set for this dual display of "wonderful wonders" found the theater packed from roof to pit. But as the time passed and the curtain remained closed, the audience grew impatient and called and hissed for him to begin. "Silence," said the manager. "Somebody has lit a candle up and in a calm voice announced that if double prices were paid the conjurer would get into a pint instead of a quart bottle. At once the audience realized that they were being hoodwinked. Some of them, enlightened enough to be wise, and this was the signal for a riot. Benches were torn up and boxes pulled down, while the timid rushed for the doors, with great loss of wigs, hats, swords and canes. Those who remained fought furiously for roughs from outside completely destroyed the interior of the theater and finished up by dragging the scenery into the street, where it was turned into a huge bonfire. Nor was the author of this destruction discovered, although it was commonly attributed either to an actor who had been discharged or to a mischievous nobleman bent on winning a wager.

DISGUISES FAILED.

Experiences of Emperor Napoleon I. at a Masked Ball.

The Emperor Napoleon I. once announced to his valet that he intended on a certain evening going to a ball at the Italian embassy and that costume and names should be used in disguise. The valet, however, obeyed and attended his imperious master and commenced to dress him in a manner which might, had the emperor followed the valet's advice, have deflected the notice of some of the more trouble with Napoleon over one or two minor matters, but when it came to changing his top boots for shoes the emperor resolutely refused.

Going into the ballroom, Napoleon at once saw a young woman in a state of undress, and, wishing to engage a lady in conversation, approached her with his hands behind his back. To his first question she replied her reply with "Sir." Turning away abruptly, he went back to the room and said: "You are right. Come, let me be recognized. Give me another costume and show this time."

The valet redressed his master and warned him to keep his hands at his side. Napoleon had no sooner done so than the second time than once more he relapsed into his natural attitude. This time a lady addressed him, "Sir, you are recognized." Once more the emperor left the room in disgust.

Napoleon was disgusted for the third time. His toilet complete, he went back to the bathroom, which he entered as if it were a barracks room, pushing and swaggering. He was at once detected, and some one whispered to him, "Your Majesty is recognized." After another disappointment and another change, still with the same result, and in the end the emperor left the embassy convinced that it was impossible to conceal his identity.

The Mathematical Problem.

Little Marion was busy at her "home work." After a great many perplexed frowns and much nibbling at her pencil she looked up and said:

"The only answer I can get to this question is 'five and three-fourths horses.' Do you suppose that is right, mamma?"

"Well, I don't know," answered her mother cautiously. "It sounds rather odd."

A long pause then the small arithmetician's face lit up with a smile.

"Oh, I know," she cried; "I'll reduce the three-fourths horses to colts!"

Optimism.

"Some fish ate the bolt right off my hook," she said.

"Cheer up. He'll be all the bigger when you do catch him," responded encouragingly.—Buffalo Express.

The swan is the longest lived of birds.

DID HIM A FAVOR.

He Apparently Innocent Request Cost the Bank Dearly.

A customer having a fairly good balance, not being able to find one morning and asked to see the manager. The usual civilities were exchanged, and the caller explained that he was making a rather good investment and had promised to pay £1,000 the next day. "Well, said the manager, "there's no difficulty about that." "Precisely," was the rejoinder, "but will you do me a small favor?" "What is it?" queried the manager. "I want my friend to see that my saving bank £1,000 is not taken away from me." "Very well, you therefore oblige me by instructing all the pay clerks and they were numerous to cash my check when it is presented how my account stands? It will make no difference to you, my man, and it cannot do any harm as you know what my balance is." (It was a little over £1,000.)

"Certainly, if you particularly wish it," replied the managing manager, for the manager's name had been long on the books, and they had never been any trouble with him.

When the check was presented the next day at a particular desk the manager, without trouble through the formality of referring to the customer's account, pleasantly inquired, "How will you take it?" and handed over the amount without ado.

The same little ceremony was gone through at four other pay desks, each clerk acting independently. Several checks for £1,000, making £5,000 in all, or nearly £4,000 in excess of the wily customer's balance.

And, of course, when Mr. — received a polite note requesting him to call at the bank, he was not to be found.—Pail Mail Gazette.

A Fashion Garrick Killed.

Women were large in the eighteenth century—more large, indeed. Several ladies have traveled to Banbridge in the same coach with a woman who was compelled to sit on a stool on the floor of the coach on account of the inconvenient height of her headdress. Banbridge, where was all the simpler in costume, writes in her diary that she has seen women wearing on their heads "an acre and a half of shrubbery, besides slopes, grass plats, tulip beds, clusters of peacock, kitchen gardens and private gardens." The secret of killing this fashion is given to Garrick. He appeared one night on the stage with a mass of vegetables on his head and a carrot suspended from each side, to the shame and confusion of many fair members of his audience."

Dr. Johnson's Resolutions.

Dr. Johnson compiled this list of good resolutions on his fifty-first birthday in 1780:—"Resolved, Deo juvante, to continue to do what I can to apply to study; to reclaim imagination; to consult the resources on Tenny's coffin; to rise early; to study religion; to go to church; to drink less strong liquors; to keep a journal; to oppose lawless and foolish writers; to do tomorrow, risen as early as I can; send for books of history of war; put books in order; scheme of life."
